Allen County had only 338 precincts reporting on Election Night. In order to accommodate an annexation in Hometown, Indiana that might have become effective after early voting started, it was necessary to program two contingent precincts for the Election to capture any votes for the newly annexed area. These contingent precincts were not be used for the election. Removing the contingent precincts from the voting machines and tabulation system after early voting started was not possible.

The election was complete with 338 precincts reporting.
